Sir,

There is not a mechanism to pull registrations of commercial vehicles being used in a criminal act. Having said that, I will say there are several instances where the truck would be seized of course, perhaps evidence or to conduct a search, etc. There are instances under Provincial Statutes such as the Motor Vehicle Act where any vehicle can be seized for a differing period of time based on the offence committed. Eg: Prohibited Driving, Impaired Driving.

When dealing specially with commercial vehicles, there are instances where if a company had demonstrated a poor safety record, the National Safety Council (NSC) can pull their NSC number which prohibits them from operating in Canada while the investigation is underway. In some instances if ICBC were to be advised of the NSC issue they may also cancel the insurance at the same time.

So, criminal acts are treated the same as any criminal act in a motor vehicle. The best defence for the convoys is to know the BC Motor Vehicle Act and Regulations. It seems to me that I have often seen load securement issues while watching the news, people on trailers, items not secured on trailers items protruding from the vehicle etc. The only thing however, do we want to be writing tickets for such offences and risk the angry truck driving mob turning on the members. We will likely become the story.

John,
I have passed this over to Supt. CARR to get you some answers as I am off tomorrow and he is working.
Thanks,
h

Hi Holly,
We are doing pre and prep work for the potential convoy protests.
One thing from your shop: could you reach out to your SMEs and or CVSE to see if there is a mechanism to deal with any operator using a commercial vehicle in a criminal act can have their registration pulled or any other sanction.

Regards,

John
